

Online World Music Festival Art competition

Are you an artist with a learning disability?

We need a picture for an internet based 'music festival' happening next year.

Wild Things is a series of compilation CDs showcasing musicians with learning disabilities from around the world. Following on from the success of Vol 1 (2008) and Vol 2 (2010), we are launching Vol 3 in the Spring of 2012.

This year we will be launching the release with an online 'World Music Festival'. This will be part of the Stay Up Late website and will be a picture/map of an imaginary music festival. When visitors click on the pictures of the various tents and stages they will then be linked to video performances of participating artists.

What we need:

- A drawn picture (either in black and white or colour)
- The picture needs to show a picture of a music festival, viewed from above.
- There need to be 6 different stages or tents in the picture.
- There also needs to be one smaller tent (the radio tent).

The project has been inspired by the Olympic games so the winning picture will need to somehow show:

- We are welcoming the world
- Show that people from different countries and cultures are involved

Please provide your image on an A3 sized piece of paper.

Please note:

We will not be able to accept any pictures that show any links to the Olympic games (due to licensing reasons). This therefore means:

- No Olympic rings
- Nothing that looks like the Olympic logo
- No mention of 2012.

The winner

The winner's image will be the one that we judge captures the mood of a 'world music festival', shows that people from different countries are involved, and will work best on our website.

The winning artist's picture will be used as the main image for the 'World Music Festival' and also appear in printed materials.
